L. R. STONE,

Sharpsburg, Ky.

Announcement is made of the rapid completion of a pictorial work comprising the Lives of the Presidential Candidates on the Democratic ticket, written by the veteran author, Col. Frank Triplet, and published by N. D. Thompson & Co., St. Louis, Mo., and New York. This work is sold through agents exclusively. It is designed, not in giving, exhaustively, the facts in the lives of the candidates, but in presenting their private lives and public services. There is almost a pathetic truth in the understanding conveyed in this old story. Many a man is lashed to death by the unreasonable calls made upon him by the members of his family who are educated up to this very end by himself, at first in that fond, slavish spirit of indulgence which the American father displays towards his offspring, as if it was some kind of a unthinking mechanical pet, and afterwards on the unfailing principle that they who sow the wind will reap the whirlwind.

Call on dad.

Business is dull, notes must be met, but appearances must be kept up. Mrs. Shoddy is going to the seashore. "Our girls" must go, the money is to come out of "Dad."

At first he refused firmly, but as one runs in after another is brought to bear on him like a battering-ram of persuasion, he gives way. New bonnets and dresses are bought, a railroad journey expenses defrayed, and that is only the beginning. Incidental expenses are always the straw that break the patient camel's back. They accumulate in heaps, stacks, and at last rise to the dignity of a monument, under which lies a pale, peaceful man, no longer pursued by the legend: "Call on Dad."—Detroit Free Press.

An Ambiguous Term.

A red faced man, with a long nose, cigar stopped in front of a store window in the South End in which hung a sign, "Umbrellas Recovered." His unkempt hair, gawky appearance, and homespun suit that fitted him as snugly as does the striped suit of the clown in the circus, all bespoke the citizen from Wayback.

"I guess I'll look over yer umbrellas, sonny," said haysseed, addressing a dapper little fellow behind the counter.

"Yes sir, right this way."

A large pile of goods was displayed for the ruralist's inspection. After looking them over for some time he slowly moved his head as he dubiously muttered:

"No, I don't see it anywhere."

"See what?" asked the astonished clerk.

"Why, yer umbrella. My darter Sal lost hern when she was down here three weeks ago Thursday, and when I saw yer sign I thought perhaps yer might have picked it up. I'll come down agin in a few weeks and I will drop in and see if you have heard anything of it. Sal thought 't that umbrella and I'd be mighty glad to git it back agin. You'll try now, sonny, to recover it for me, won't yer? Goods lay till I see yer agin."—Boston Globe.

Egg-Destroying Hens.

There is probably nothing more annoying or more difficult to overcome than a habit a great many hens have of eating eggs. While there is no way of curing hens from eating eggs, to prevent them by mechanical means is very easy. A nest with a double bottom, the upper one inclined so as to allow the egg to roll to the lower one, answers very well; but the habit is one that is acquired and therefore a lasting one. Hens learn it by being in the presence of broken eggs, but they rarely break eggs themselves until taught. If fed regularly with meat for a while they will forget the habit, but the safest plan is to cut off the heads of such fowls before the habit becomes general with the flock.

Henry Ward Beecher has satisfied himself that the assembly upon the private character of Grover Cleveland are slanderous, and will take the proper for the slandered man.

THEY NAME IT ST. JOHN.

A Hawling Babe on a Street-Car. Creates a Disturbance and Finds a Name?

A crowded Third Avenue street car was going up to town yesterday afternoon, when a lady and a gentleman with a baby in his arms got aboard at Canal street. The gentleman was given a seat, and almost instantly the infant gave vent to screams suggestive of bolic or a cruel pin. The father tried in vain to quiet the child, and finally handed it over to its mother.

"Turn to its mummy!" said she, taking the child. "Nanny ole papa teases baby, Sall mamma whip pap? 'Es, see sall."

The child was not to be quieted by this baby talk, however, and yelled, it possible, more loud than before.

"It's a pin," said an old lady opposite. A careful search failed to locate such a cause, and the baby continued to howl.

"The child is hungry," said a gentleman seated next to the mother; "anybody can see that."

An old lady then came forward from the other end of the car and said to the poor, excited mother: "My dear child, I am not a mother, but an old maid; still I think the baby wants a drink of water, nothing more."

The car had just reached Cooper Institute, and hearing the old maid's remarks, the father jumped off the car and snatched up a tin dipper of cold meal water there on hand for the use of the drivers and conductors, gave the baby a drink. Instantly its cries ceased and it began to laugh and crow.

"Didn't I tell you?" said the old maid; "Cold water will do for children sometimes what all else fail to accomplish."

"Oh! I am so glad," said the mother, "for we are taking baby to be christened."

"Yes," spoke up the happy father; "and we are at loss for a name for him, I suggest that we call him St. John, because of his fondness for cold water."—New York Mail/Exp. ess.

For Revenue Only.

There is nothing philanthropic about Benjamin F. Butler. He was for revenue only when he left the secessionists, for whom he had done yeoman service in the Democratic National convention in 1860, and joined the Republicans. He was for revenue only when he bulldozed the "people of New Orleans, purchased contraband cotton and set up a bankrupt California gambler as his dummy in his store. He was for revenue only when he was the hiring of corporations in Congress, letting all the land grabs and subsidies pass without opposition, and working and voting against the Thurman bill at their bidding. He was for revenue only when he originated and got through Congress the infamous salary grab and back pay steal. He was for revenue only when he made a demagogic pretense of intense affection for the working men of the country, and like the miserly and grasping old rascal in the play, goes about telling everybody "this is the act of an honest man."—New York World.

He Had Provocation.

"I am a base ball player," said the prisoner to the judge "I'll tell you how it happened."

"Go on, sir."

"I was at the bat. There were three men on bases. I asked for a low ball and reached back to strike, but it was not where I wanted it. Then this man—"

"Hold on, sir! Who do you allude to as this man?"

"The corpse, of course. Then this man shouted, 'foul and out!' Then I brained him."

"Who did you say he was?"

"He was the umpire."

"I beg your pardon. You are discharged. The clerk will enter the costs against the late umpire's estate."—New York Graphic.

How the Kangaroo Acted.

"So you went to the circus, Mary?"

"Oh, yes, and enjoyed myself very much."

"Did you see the kangaroo in the menagerie?"

"I did, and felt sorry for it. Poor thing, it is dying, isn't it?"

"Why no. What put that notion in your head?"

"The way it acted. When I saw it I seemed to be on its last legs."—Somerville Journal.

On Picket Duty.

"O Rob, how foolish you are! cried Fanny. 'I told you to shut the door when you went out. You didn't do it, and how the biscuits are so cold they won't be light in time for tea.'"

"I'm sorry, Fanny—truly, I am—but I forgot all about it."

"I suppose you did; but it would be a comfort if you could remember anything."

At the supper table Mrs. Bertram asked:

"Did you do your errand at Gleason's?"

"O, mammy, I'm awful sorry! The boys wanted me to play ball, and I thought we would go there when we came home, and then I forgot it."

"Did you go to the post-office?" said the father.

Bob's face showed plainly that he had forgotten that, too.

"I should think a boy of sixteen was old enough to remember a few things," remarked Mr. Bertram; but Bob's untrustworthy memory had become such an old story that little concern was made.

"I wish I'd lived in the war times," exclaimed our hero a few days later, as he hid down an exciting book he had just finished. "The battles must have been grand, but I should have liked picket duty, too."

"What an inspiration it would be to a man, as he walked back and forth in the dark, to remember that perhaps the safety of the whole army lay in his keeping!"

His mother shook her head: "I don't think you would have made a good picket."

"Now, mother, why not?" asked Rob, quite indignant that his patriotism should be thus assailed.

"I doubt whether you would have believed in a danger you could not see, and so you would have laid down your gun and been at the mercy of the foe."

"Why, mother, a fellow would be a fool to do that."

Mrs. Bertram smiled.

"Did you ever see me do anything so silly?"
